Chinese and Hong Kong companies have acquired or made investments in companies with significant compliance issues that were:

- 66% of Chinese and Hong Kong compliance leaders feel stretched by their company’s attempts to expand into new markets and adopt new business models.

- 76% of Chinese and Hong Kong general managers encourage employees to apply their own moral compass to compliance decisions rather than relying on static policies and procedures.

- 46% of Chinese and Hong Kong respondents are aware of compliance issues that have yet to be discovered by a regulator.

- 64% of Chinese and Hong Kong compliance heads say compliance standards vary widely across different countries or locations.

- Respondents in China and Hong Kong were more joined-up than their global peers, however, collaboration is still a problem: 34% say their organization is either very or somewhat siloed.

- Chinese and Hong Kong companies play a more active role in overseeing third parties, but risk exposure is still high: 37% rely on supply chains to police themselves.

Other points of note in China & Hong Kong:

- 64% of Chinese and Hong Kong compliance leaders feel stretched by their company’s attempts to expand into new markets and adopt new business models.

- 76% of Chinese and Hong Kong general managers encourage employees to apply their own moral compass to compliance decisions rather than relying on static policies and procedures.

- 46% of Chinese and Hong Kong respondents are aware of compliance issues that have yet to be discovered by a regulator.

- 64% of Chinese and Hong Kong compliance heads say compliance standards vary widely across different countries or locations.

- Respondents in China and Hong Kong were more joined-up than their global peers, however, collaboration is still a problem: 34% say their organization is either very or somewhat siloed.

- Chinese and Hong Kong companies play a more active role in overseeing third parties, but risk exposure is still high: 37% rely on supply chains to police themselves.