US companies have acquired or made investments in companies with significant compliance issues that were:

- 78% of US compliance leaders feel stretched by their company’s attempts to expand into new markets and adopt new business models.
- 75% of US general managers encourage employees to apply their own moral compass to compliance decisions rather than relying on static policies and procedures.
- 64% of US respondents are aware of compliance issues that have yet to be discovered by a regulator.
- 72% of US compliance heads say compliance standards vary widely across different countries or locations.
- 56% of US respondents are the most reluctant to speak openly about compliance challenges for fear of issues being highlighted.
- 64% say that supply chain partners could pose unknown compliance risks.

Other points of note in the USA:

- Supply chains are most likely to be of concern to US respondents: 64%.
- 75% of US general managers encourage employees to apply their own moral compass to compliance decisions rather than relying on static policies and procedures.
- 64% of US respondents are aware of compliance issues that have yet to be discovered by a regulator.
- 72% of US compliance heads say compliance standards vary widely across different countries or locations.
- 56% of US respondents are the most reluctant to speak openly about compliance challenges for fear of issues being highlighted.
- 64% say that supply chain partners could pose unknown compliance risks.